

Breathing

When we are upset or angry or frightened, it often helps us to feel better if we are able to focus on our breathing. We need to practice our breathing when we are calm, so that it will be easy for us to remember how to do it even if we are upset.

Try to practice at least one of the types of breathing on this hand out every day.